This sound is so tied to the brand that Harley-Davidson even applied for a trademark on it at one time. So why does the Harley-Davidson V-Twin have such a unique rhythm? Engine noise is produced by the compressed gases exiting the cylinders through the exhaust valves and then through the exhaust system where they are either muffled or amplified depending on

Remember When Harley-Davidson Sued Honda For Being Too Harley?

Harley felt they were trying to duplicate the rumble of the V-Twin engine, which many buyers were seeking. On February 1, 1994, the company filed a sound trademark application for the distinctive sound of a Harley-Davidson motorcycle engine:
