Roland Barthes's famous essay "The Death of the Author" (1967) is a meditation on the rules of author and reader in the formation of meaning as mediated by the text. Roland Barthes 's essential argument is that the author has no sovereignty over his own words (or images, sounds, etc.) that belong to the reader who interprets them.

According to Austin (1962) in his speech acts theory, there are three actions related to speech acts.The first act is locutionary act which is the basic production of meaningful utterance. This act is much related to the hearer, if the hearer fails to understand what the speaker is saying then the speaker has failed to do a locutionary act .

Segregation, to use the terminology of the Jewish philosopher Martin Buber, substitutes an "I-it" relationship for an "I-thou" relationship and ends up relegating persons to the status of things. Hence segregation is not only politically, economically and sociologically unsound, it is morally wrong and awful.

Buber saw the Torah as the past dialogue between Israel and God, and the present dialogue between the individual reader, the I, and God, the Thou. He concluded that while one must open himself to the entire teaching of the Torah, he need only accept a particular law of the Torah if he feels that it is being spoken now to him.
