7 Dark Reasons Why Good Workers Don't Get Promoted. Sometimes go-to people do get promoted. But in too many situations, management wants such people right where they are, keeping the system in balance. Yes, promoting them may be the right thing to do, but it might not happen if doing so will significantly upset the workflow in the department.

Older people can get shockingly critical of kids who can't afford to do this too. It's also assumed that only liberal arts grads are in these straits, but it's not true... The CS and IT grads wind up taking low-level tech support positions, which typically require a 4-year degree, being on call, working rotating shifts, and doing 2 people's jobs for the princely sum of $10-$11/hr.
